

Restoring Hope To Earthquake Victims

(NAPS)—The devastating effects of an earthquake last a long time. Restoring hope to victims of these quakes, such as those in India and before that El Salvador, may take years. But it can be done, and many Americans are helping in the effort.

Many Americans are getting involved in the long-term restoration effort to help earthquake victims rebuild their lives.

Most of us witnessed those terrifying scenes from our television or on the Internet within the safety and security of our homes.

But what if something like that were to happen here, shattering lives and causing widespread damage? It would be impossible to tune out the effects within a few weeks or months. Or even years.

Many charitable organizations have provided aid to India and El Salvador for decades—as well as other countries in desperate need—and are committed to emergency relief and long-term restoration. To alleviate suffering and restore hope to earthquake victims, these charitable organizations need your help—now more urgently than ever. Moreover, it's never too late to help.

To learn how to get involved, call World Vision at 1-888-56-CHILD or visit the Web site at www.worldvision.org.